Sukti Dhital is deputy director of the Robert L. Bernstein Institute for Human Rights at NYU School of Law, a research center that promotes scholarship, advocacy and education on human rights issues in the US and abroad. Previously, she was executive director of Nazdeek, a legal empowerment organization that she cofounded. Nazdeek was recently awarded the inaugural Namati Justice Prize for its groundbreaking work in fusing grassroots legal education, community-driven data collection, use of legal remedies and strategic advocacy to increase accountability in the delivery of health, nutrition and labor benefits for poor and marginalized communities.

Prior to Nazdeek, Ms. Dhital was the director of the Reproductive Rights Unit at the Human Rights Law Network, India, and a litigation associate at Bingham McCutchen. She is a member of the International Social and Economic Rights Project (iSERP), has taught in Harvard T.H. Chan School of Public Health’s Global Health Rights Program and co-authored a variety of human rights-related articles.
