

Notes on Contributors
Volume II, Number 2

Leslie A. DeNardis is Assistant Professor in the Department of Government and Politics at Sacred Heart University. She specializes in American government and public policy, public administration, and the politics and political economy of Latin America. She has taught, previously, at New Mexico State University and the University of New Haven. She also has served in elected local office and as a public management adviser to various state and local governments.

David Plazek is Assistant Professor in the Social Science Department of Lyndon State College. He specializes in comparative politics and international relations. He also is Chair of the Institute for Canadian Studies at Lyndon State and recently has begun to focus upon the politics of local and state American governments.

Armando E. Rodriguez is Associate Professor in the Department of Economics and Finance at the University of New Haven. He specializes in economics, industrial organization, econometrics and financial microeconomics and has considerable experience as a private-sector economist and consultant as well as an academician. He also is a former United States Federal Trade Commission economist and Research Professor at the Center for Trade and Commercial Diplomacy at the Monterey Institute of International Studies, having also taught at the Cameron School of Business, the University of St. Thomas, and the University of Texas.

David E. Schmitt is the Edward W. Brooke Professor in the Department of Political Science at Northeastern University. He specializes in comparative politics, international relations, ethnic conflict, and United States national security policy. Within comparative politics, he has a particular focus on Ireland and Canada with particular attention to regional and nationalist movements, especially regarding Northern Ireland and Quebec.

Jacob Segal is Assistant Professor of Political Science in the Department of History, Philosophy and Political Science at Kingsborough Community College of the City University of New York. He specializes in political theory with a particular focus upon modern political thought.