“More than 40 years ago, Northeastern University School of Law pioneered an experientially based model of legal education that engages every student and that produces outstanding lawyers with a strong grounding in fundamental values and critical thinking. Our integrated program is second to none, but we plan to break new ground once again. Building on our historic successes, we will expand our direct engagement with employers, using the insights we gain to further expose and strengthen the connection between theory and experience in a Northeastern law education.”

- MARTHA F. DAVIS
ASSOCIATE DEAN FOR CLINICAL AND EXPERIENTIAL EDUCATION
Scholar and Leading Practitioner

Known as both a scholar and a leading practitioner, Associate Dean Davis joined the Northeastern faculty in 2002. She has published more than 30 law review articles on women’s rights, poverty law and human rights. An abridged edition of her prize-winning co-edited book, Bringing Human Rights Home, chronicling the US human rights movement, is forthcoming from the University of Pennsylvania Press. Her book, Brutal Need: Lawyers and the Welfare Rights Movement, is a classic in the genre of law and social change.

Prior to joining the law faculty, Associate Dean Davis was vice president and legal director for the NOW Legal Defense and Education Fund. As a women’s rights lawyer, she was counsel in several cases before the US Supreme Court, including Nguyen v. INS, an equal protection challenge to sex-based citizenship laws that she argued before the Court. She continues to regularly participate in litigation, legislative drafting and policy development in her areas of expertise.

Associate Dean Davis teaches Women’s Rights Lawyering, Constitutional Law and Professional Responsibility. She is also a faculty director for the law school’s Program on Human Rights and the Global Economy and chairs the board of directors of the National Economic and Social Rights Initiative.
