We invest

Venture Mentors

The past year has been one of the most exciting periods of growth in our history. We have hired new team members and are expanding our program to include more partners and training opportunities. The program now features a combined investment of $1 billion in startups.

Dan McCarthy, a co-founder, and Jeff McCurry, the CEO, join us this month to discuss the future of our program and how we are helping to create the next generation of entrepreneurs.

The Northstar mentoring program will build a university-wide database to match entrepreneurial profiles with students. This will allow students to connect with other mentors and professionals, and to create an online directory, bringing new ideas to campus and to innovation centers.

We advance

We want to create a learning environment where students can connect with mentors and explore their interests. We are working on developing partnerships with local companies and organizations to provide opportunities for students to get involved and gain valuable experience.

Mindful that mentorship is a key component in the success of our students, we are committed to developing a network of mentors and partners who can help guide them on their journey.

In summary, our goal is to create a vibrant and dynamic community of mentors and partners who can help students grow and thrive. We believe that by providing opportunities for students to connect with mentors and partners, we can help them achieve their goals and reach their full potential.

For now, mentoring is not a job, it is a calling. He tells funders how to achieve success. "There are three things you must understand: good management, a good concept, and a good market."

We celebrate

The Secretary of Education, John B. King, Jr., monthly speaking to students on campus. He announced the creation of the new “My Promise” initiative, which aims to help students achieve their goals and reach their full potential.

King talked about the importance of education and how it can help create a better future for students. He encouraged students to stay committed and to never give up on their dreams.

The Empower campaign will be launched this fall, and we are excited to see how it will impact the students and the community. We are confident that the campaign will help students achieve their goals and reach their full potential.

We hope that you will take part in the Empower campaign and help support our students in their journey to success.
